If you haven’t heard jazz vibraphonist Dick Sisto, you’re in for a pleasant surprise. His playing style combines the four-mallet innovations and harmonic sophistication of Gary Burton with the bluesy soulfulness and bebop vocabulary of Milt Jackson.

Sisto, however, cites Ahmad Jamal, Bill Evans, and Miles Davis as his greatest influences. These players’ lyricism, phrasing, and use of space greatly affected him. But perhaps the greatest impact these players had on Sisto was to inspire him to discover his own unique voice on the instrument. He brings a sound and style to the vibes that is fresh and original.

In 1995, Sisto released a CD titled American Love Song, on which he is backed by Fred Hersch on piano, Drew Gress on bass, and Tom Rainey on drums. The following transcription is from the Cole Porter composition “Everytime We Say Goodbye” and includes Sisto’s interpretation of the melody and his solo.

Several aspects of Sisto’s playing are worthy of mention in order to enhance an understanding of this solo. He generally plays with a smooth and connected, legato phrasing. Sisto’s rhythmic feel is difficult to transfer into standard notation. He often pulls and pushes the time within a phrase much like a singer would interpret a melody. This is best understood through listening to and imitating the recording.

Dynamic contrasts give his playing more depth, suggesting counter-melodies within a linear, or two-mallet, context. Performers should exaggerate the dynamic markings to create the desired effect. Sisto effectively uses the entire range of the instrument. The upper octave is used both to convey a light, delicate feel (à la Ahmad Jamal) at the beginning of the solo as well as during the emotional peak or climax of the solo.

Once the notes are learned, the performer should devote considerable time to shaping the phrases and playing every note with feeling. The solo is extremely lyrical, and the real difficulty lies in its musical interpretation. As with any transcription, it is most beneficial for the performer to hear the original work in conjunction with learning the written part. So check it out in the Members Only section of the PAS Web site at www.pas.org.

For information on Dick Sisto’s recordings, visit www.dicksisto.com.

John Wilmarth is an active performer and educator who is pursuing a master’s degree in percussion performance at the University of Iowa under the direction of Dan Moore, and who is a teaching assistant for the UI Jazz Studies program. He earned a bachelor’s degree in Music Education from the University of Kentucky, where he studied with James Campbell.
The Percussive Arts Society wishes to express its deepest gratitude to the following businesses and individuals who have given generous gifts and contributions to PAS over the years.

PRESIDENT’S CIRCLE

- $500,000 or more
- McMahon Foundation
- Caroll Bratman

- $250,000 or more
- Nancy & Perry D. Preusch
- Remo, Inc.

- $100,000 or more
- Fred Gruber
- Zildjian Family

- $50,000 or more
- Emil Richards
- Michey Toperzer

- $25,000 or more
- Remo, Inc.
- Sabian, Ltd.